COMMODORE FOOTE'S DREAM.

Reclining at the close of day,
Upon my tiny bed,
I heard the whispering Fairies say,
We come, with noiseless tread.

We come, brave little COMMODORE,
To measure height and size;
We wager half our golden joys
That you will loose the prize.

We hear you called the smallest man,
Your "Little Sister" smaller,
And your companion, COL. SMALL,
Only a trifle taller.

Then rising from my tiny bed,
They saw that I was smaller,
For the smallest one of all their throng
Was eleven inches taller.

Now since I've measured with this throng,
Conducted by their plan,
I now proclaim to all the world
That I'm the smallest man.
